RecapRight: Lead Research Project

Sample project | Prepared by Emem Samuel

This is a sample project showing how I research and deliver leads. The product, companies and figures are illustrative. Real projects use real client data and results.

The product

RecapRight turns meeting recordings into assigned, tracked action items. It does one thing: nothing agreed on a call gets forgotten. Price: about $40 per user per month.

Who buys it

Niche: accounting and consulting firms with 10 to 60 staff.

Why they buy: these firms live on client calls. Deadlines and follow-ups are agreed out loud, then lost in notes and inboxes. A missed follow-up costs billable work and client trust, so the problem has a real price.

Ideal buyer in one sentence: a 10 to 60 person accounting or consulting firm that runs many client calls and has no system for tracking what was promised on them.

Who I avoid

- Firms over about 80 staff (they usually have an operations team and tooling)
- Solo practitioners (too small to need a team tool)
- Firms already using a meeting-notes tool

Signals I search for

- Job posts: coordinator or operations roles whose main duty is tracking follow-ups or writing meeting recaps
- Client reviews: mentions of slow follow-through or unclear next steps
- Growth: rapid hiring, new offices, new service lines
- Partner posts: partners complaining about admin after calls
- Process shifts: a move to hybrid or video-first client meetings

Where I look

Company career pages and job boards, LinkedIn company and partner posts, Google and Yelp reviews, firm websites and news pages, and local business directories.

How I verify each lead

1. Confirm the firm exists and fits the size range.
2. Confirm the contact holds the decision-making role.
3. Check the email is deliverable.
4. Open the evidence link and confirm it is live on the delivery date.
5. Remove anything that does not pass. Bad leads are replaced free.

Sample deliverable: top 5 leads

Company	Contact role	Problem	Evidence	Why now
Harlow & Pike Accounting	Managing Partner	Follow-ups from client calls get lost	Open Practice Coordinator post lists tracking follow-ups as main duty	Hiring a person to do what software could. Reach out before it is filled.
Meridian Advisory Group	Operations Director	Missed deadlines after strategy calls	Two public reviews mention slow follow-through	The cost is already visible to new prospects.
Oakridge Tax Partners	Founding Partner	Growth outpacing admin	9 hires in 90 days, second office opened	Twice the calls on the same process.
Brightwater Consulting	Head of Client Delivery	Partners forget commitments from calls	Partner post about rebuilding Tuesday's promises on Friday	Stated the pain publicly. Easy opener.

Company	Contact role	Problem	Evidence	Why now
Lumen Financial Advisors	Chief Operating Officer	No standard way to log call outcomes	Client Service Associate post asks for meticulous note-taking	Note-taking is done by hand today.

The full 20-lead list is in the attached spreadsheet, RecapRight_Sample_Leads.xlsx, with every lead's location, size, contact role, signal type, evidence, why-now note and priority.

Sample result

Measure	Result
Leads researched	50
Passed all checks	44
Replaced or removed	6 (3 wrong role, 2 firm too large, 1 bounced email)
Sales-ready	44 of 50 (88%)

What the client receives

- The full lead list as a spreadsheet, sorted by priority
- Contact role, verified email, and LinkedIn where available
- The problem, the proof, and a one-line reason to reach out now
- A short note on which signals produced the best leads and what to adjust next time

Suggested first message to these leads

"Hi [Name], I saw [specific evidence, such as your Practice Coordinator post]. RecapRight turns your client calls into tracked action items automatically, so nothing promised on a call gets lost. Worth a 15-minute look?"

Next steps

1. Send me your ideal customer and who to avoid.
2. I send a free 5-lead sample for your niche.
3. If it fits, we start a 50-lead pilot at an agreed amount.
